Law knowledge

"How Law Works" visually explains the key stages and roles in a legal system. It begins with the creation of law, where lawmakers such as legislators draft and pass statutes to govern society. These laws are organized into different types, including criminal law, civil law, administrative law, and constitutional law, each serving distinct functions—from punishing crimes to protecting individual rights.

The next stage involves law enforcement, where police and related agencies ensure the laws are followed and investigate any violations. When disputes or violations occur, they move to legal proceedings, where judges oversee cases, lawyers represent the parties, and legal decisions are made.

The process ends with judgments and penalties, which may include punishments (like imprisonment), compensation, or court orders. The system relies on various stakeholders—legislators, police, lawyers, judges, and citizens—working together to uphold justice and maintain social order.

About us

We’re a team of four slightly sleep-deprived, highly determined students on a mission to make our major project not just pass—but impress! What started as a classroom assignment has turned into a creative adventure full of brainstorming marathons, last-minute breakthroughs, and more coffee than we’d like to admit.

Each of us brings something unique to the table—whether it’s killer research skills, design magic, coding wizardry, or the power to keep everyone (mostly) on track. Together, we’ve combined our strengths (and memes) to build something we’re genuinely proud of.
